MARINE PAINTING THAT INTERESTS

On Exhibition at Veerhoff's Gallery and Attracts Attention.

At Veerhoff's gallery in F street there by W. T. Richards. The subject of the picture, "On the Coast of Cornwall," is a happy selection for the particular talent possessed by Mr. Richards in the interpretation of marines and scenes along the coast where high cliffs aid in In this work the artist has shown more breadth of treatment than is shown in "On the Coast of New Jersey." owned by the Corcoran gallery, and painted to order for the gallery in 1883.

In the picture owned by the Corcoran gallery one feels the power of the ocean as a limitless expanse, and, although the technique is that of an earlier school, its popularity has placed it among the favored pictures in the permanent collection of the Corcoran gallery. In the picture "On the Coast of Cornwall" there is a more intimate feeling that comes from a near acquaintance to the great ocean.

The waves are expressed with that truth and realism that shows a close observation of this form of water. expression of a separate vitality belonging to each wave, and yet harmonio with the entire body of water, is felt in this picture, possibly through a better technical expression

The Paris Salon is now in progress. annual event of the National Society of Fine Arts, commonly known as the Old Salon. It contains nearly 3,000 works of art and as a matter of comparison is seven times as large as the recent salon held at the Corcoran Gallery. Of the 500 artists represented 37 are Americans. The work of the American artists is said to compare favorably with that of their French, English, German, Italian and Spanish colleagues.

Smartest Styles of the Season at Pronounced Savings

The consummate style of these stunning garments is only equaled by the beauty of the fabrics and the superb workmanship featuring in them. Without a previous inkling of their prices, you would readily class them with garments costing several dollars more than we have marked them.

We do not hesitate to invite you to try to match our values, as we have perfect assurance, bred of actual investigation, that they are better than the best. Not only were the garments exceptionally well bought, but we are satisfied with a smaller than ordinary profit margin, which accounts for the seeming inadequacy of our prices.
